Where Children and Parents
Learn and Grow Together

DCP is an affiliate of the Lake Washington Technical College
Parent Education Network

To Play is to Learn

At DCP, children learn by doing, watching, and feeling, where the emphasis is on the process of learning rather than the product. With help and encouragement only when necessary, our children grow in their abilities and skills, with each success bringing the satisfaction and accomplishment necessary for them to feel good about themselves.

Emphasis on Social Development

Preschool is also a beginning step in learning to live with and become part of a group. With understanding and careful guidance from member parents and teachers, children gradually become aware of the rights and feelings of others as well as a growing consciousness of their own uniqueness.

Parents Learn Too!

As an affiliate of the Lake Washington Technical College parent education network of preschools, DCP conducts monthly parent education classes.

With the guidance of our teachers, parents can collaborate and share parenting experiences to help increase our understanding and enjoyment of our children's development.

You make it work!

The success and value of any cooperative preschool depends on the conscientious effort of each parent. Under the guidance of trained teachers, parents gain insight into the behavior of their child in particular, as well as children in general.

Because we're an affiliate of Lake Washington Technical College's parent education network, your participation in class earns college credits, which can be used towards renewal of teaching certificates.

DCP is a non-profit organization, managed by an elected Board of Trustees. Apart from helping out one day per week at school, parents can volunteer to serve on a committee or on the board to help the preschool manage its day-to-day operations.
